

Spiritual

Pupils have many opportunities to reflect on their work and make improvements. Due to the nature of product design, we ask children to make products that would appeal to others, causing them to consider what makes other people happy. D&T gives our children abundant opportunities to use creative thinking. They need to be resilient, know when to accept compromise and be persistent during the 'making' phase of each topic, and relish the opportunity to accomplish a new challenge.

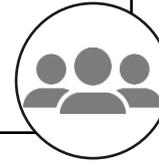

Moral

Through our cooking and nutrition units, children relish the chance to explore the foods of other cultures. They are encouraged to be respectful of the difference of opinion, flavours and ingredients used by people around the world. Children confidently express their views about designs. They make rational judgements about what is achievable, and willingly review and alter their designs.

Social

Children have opportunities to collaborate and work as a team to design and build imaginative projects. They have opportunities to sensitively and respectfully challenge the opinions of peers through analysis and evaluation.

Through learning about nutrition, children are empowered to make a positive contribution to their family life.

Cultural

Children learn about key designers who have helped to shape our heritage, culture and world.

In DT children are offered a rich range of experiences; trips, visitors and being exposed to foods from different cultures.

Children are open to the reality that their ideas will differ to those of others.
